The colors and contours of all that golden region had been etched and blazoned upon the child soul of Felise. That one sharp peak, spiritual with distance, veiled in leagues of shadowless light, towering faint and blue from some deeper, greenes valley, she had peopled with dreams; from her casement she had seen it near and black against the silent, purple dawn. Behind it, thought the child, walks God. It was the peak of Ixmiquilpan. The regiment came in sight of Cazadero across the uplands--a castle embowered; orchards; an aqueduct hiding in vines; long stables, rubblewalled, red-roofed; a village; a chapel yellow as gold. The princely hacienda lay back from the road, to be approached by its own road, poplarlined. Have you selected camp The voice of Dubois roused Roderick from revery. Not yet, sir, he said. Shall we see...
