Not illustrated. 1875 Excerpt: .Fieldbook from the Diagram of Prismoidal Correction, by assigning values to the horizontal lines equal to double those shown, thus making the scale identical with the diagrams for thorough-cut sections. The formula of solidity is given on page 107 of that volume, and need not be repeated. Enter the diagram with the side-height and the width of excavation at the road-bed, for each section; and with the dimensions touched by the diagonal, for each solid. The sum of the three quantities obtained gives the volume of the solid. The dimensions touched by diagonals are the side-height at one end of it and the width of excavation at the road-bed at the other end. Example.--The following cut taken from page 107 As given in the volume, 10,700 cu. ft. = 396.-3 c.y. 75. Irregular Earthwork may also be computed by the method of Henck s Fieldbook from the Diagram of Prismoidal Correction, after doubling the scale as above. The formula of solidity (p. 109) is based upon a subdivision of the solid into vertical triangular prisms--the solid bounded by the plane of the road-bed extended, the plane of the side-slopes, and a vertical plane passing through the two slope-stakes on each side, being first included and then deducted. The horizontal length of each of these prisms is equal to the length of the solid, the width is a given horizontal dimension, and the altitude at each vertical edge is a recorded cutting. Enter the diagram, for each...
